

CASE STUDY

A major processor of salads, ready prepared and packaged food, was encountering issues with cleaning and damaging of delicate food items, with their plastic modular belt.

Significant time was being spent cleaning the belt after each commodity change to prevent cross contamination of product. There was also an issue with product migrating through the belt, becoming "bruised" and lowering the quality and shelf life of the product.

They approached us for a solution to their problems, and we recommended replacement of their plastic modular belt, with Cog-Veyor.

Cog-Veyor has no hinges or crevices for product to become trapped, so product quality is improved. Cleaning time was also reduced saving water, time and money in the process, and cross contamination is no longer an issue.

Both conveyors are now running Cog-Veyor belts and the client is very pleased with the outcome. The positive drive of the belts ensure smooth quiet operation, and our unique self tracking lugs, ensure the belt runs true, with no maintenance or downtime.
